ALTRUISTIC ALL-STARS

Montage's 2017 Memory Makers use their kindness and intelligence to help others in their communities.

BY NANCY DORMAN-HICKSON

Every year, Montage Hotels & Resorts asks American youth between the ages of 13 and 17 to submit essays explaining how they're making tremendous differences in their communities as a part of the Montage Memory Makers contest. Choosing the competition's top 12 contenders is tough; narrowing the list to five winners via a judges' panel is even tougher. This year's panel consisted of Montage founder and CEO Alan Fuerstman and literary ambassador Brad Meltzer; Norah Weinstein and Kelly Sawyer Patricof, co-presidents of the nonprofit Baby2Baby, which provides low-income children with necessities; and Sid Espinosa, the director of philanthropy and civic engagement at Microsoft. The judges selected the winners based on criteria such as ongoing community service or volunteering efforts, and achievements which made a meaningful impact. Each of the top winners receives a $10,000 academic scholarship and a two-night stay at any of the Montage properties. Inspired by the associate-led community outreach program Hearts of Montage, Montage Memory Makers is an opportunity to shine a light on young people who are giving back in their communities. Here, Montage Magazine presents the 2017 Memory Makers.

WINNER: [REDACTED] from Newport Coast, California

PROJECT: The Candy Palace

ACCOMPLISHMENTS: Raising $274,000 and providing more than 771,000 meals

When she was 9, [REDACTED] wrote "Izzy and the Candy Palace." Soon after, she visited the Second Harvest Food Bank of Orange County where she saw a tiny replica room and learned a family of five might live in a similar space—if they had shelter at all. Then her mother told her about people taking ketchup packets from fast-food restaurants "so they can make soup for their kids," Janavs says.

She decided to publish her book and donate its proceeds to help people in need through what she called The Candy Palace program. At the food bank, she also opened Izzy's Corner, a life-sized replica of the book's Candy Palace. There, Izzy's Corner volunteers, ages 7 to 13, help sort and package nutritious produce to feed the hungry. With organizations such as the Boy Scouts of America eager to participate, the popular youth volunteer program is booked six months in advance.

Janavs also created 3-D boxes shaped to look like the Candy Palace. Kids use the container to collect spare change, which is donated to help those without enough to eat. Since publishing "Izzy and the Candy Palace," Janavs has helped other kids publish books for charities and she's now working on a second book herself.

Today, 16-year-old Janavs continues to work on expanding the nonprofit's reach. "I'm talking to the food bank about implementing my program nationwide, so more kids can find creative ways to give," she says. (thecandypalace.com)
